unremembered

I have only what I remember —Ruth Roach Pierson

tendrils unmoving loll over my knee, the jellyfish luminescent & solitary on my lap.
like a human brain but more beautiful, I marvel at its dehydrated existence unable to lift or float or reach out to its unravelling, wrinkling in effort over my fingers, which stroke & soothe & prod for remembrance.

it was a job, finding the jellyfish. I had to go beyond the depths, beyond the starless ocean, down where the colourful reefs should have been but where all I could see was a blank slate. each glimpse of a tendril's oral arms floating decried an actual sighting of nothing more than a momentary contrast to the dark or a magnified blankness to the unknown. either way it led me astray, into confusion, into a blankness I'd inherited & that the naked eye could not discern.
